Dr. James Nelson Gingerich is one of the founders of Maple City Health Care Center and serves the center as a physician and as Guardian of Vision (CEO).

James lived in North Goshen during the time he attended Goshen College. He fell in love with the diversity and pluck of the people living in the neighborhood. Understanding that the people in the neighborhood needed medical care, James decided to attend medical school in order to be able to provide the medical care that the community needed.

James graduated from the Pritzker School of Medicine at the University of Chicago in 1985. After residency, James, his wife Barb, and two sons moved back to James's beloved neighborhood. James and Barb helped their neighbors create a health center in 1989. James's community leadership and work for Maple City Health Care Center earned the National Dorothy Richardson Neighborworks Award in 2006.

In 2012, the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation's LEAP project chose Maple City Health Care Center as one of thirty-one exemplary practices from throughout the nation. James and other leaders from the thirty-one organizations contributed to a model of primary care that the foundation is now disseminating.

In addition to fostering healthy community, James enjoys bee-keeping, weaving, Sacred Harp singing, and regular trips to the Chicago Symphony.
